MRS. ARVITA F. FRANCIS, Brockton bride, who attempted suicide at City Theatre because she thought rich young husband ceased to love her.

SHOTS FAIL TO STOP GEM THIEF

A man walked into the office of the Roxbury Loan Company, No. 1247 Tremont street today and said blushingly: "I want to see a diamond ring."

Clerk John J. Gately showed him one—then another—and then a third. The customer thrust all three rings in his pocket, slipped out the door and ran up Tremont street.

Gately circled the counter and grabbed a revolver as he started in pursuit. The customer had half a block start. Gately fired four shots in the air, but the customer kept running and escaped through Cottage place. Gately went back to the store and figured the three rings were worth $265. Then he telephoned the police to arrest:

"A foreigner; Greek or Italian—five feet five inches tall, weighing about 125 pounds. He was about thirty years old, smooth faced and dark. He wore a brown suit—no overcoat and a soft brown hat."

LANNIN NEW SOX PRESIDENT

WHY BRIDE SOUGHT TO KILL SELF

BROCKTON, Dec. 1.—A story of pathos, happiness, misery and love is hidden in the attempted suicide at the City Theatre Friday afternoon when Mrs. Arvita F. Francis, a blonde of exceptional beauty, the bride of less than a year of Wallace L. Francis, son of a wealthy shoe man of this city, drank nearly an ounce of aconite and struggled to die.

Despondent and alone, the young wife went to the theatre in the hope that her broken spirit might be brightened by the vaudeville show. She had deliberately planned to take her life when entering the theatre; in fact, she had planned it twenty-four hours before. She did not want to live, but told no one. After she had taken the draught of poison she expressed a desire to die and fought off the doctor. Now that she has recovered, life is sweet to her.

Mrs. Francis returned to her room at No. 8 Clinton avenue, the West Elm Hotel Annex, this afternoon from the Brockton Hospital, where she was taken from the theatre. She has recovered but it will be three weeks before she will be strong enough to go out.

Heads Plea of Wooer.

Mrs. Francis is but nineteen years of age and looks all of two years younger. She has a wealth of flaxen hair, handsome blue eyes, even, white teeth; an extremely pretty mouth, a well-rounded face made beautiful by dimples and color, an exquisite neck and finely proportioned figure. Her name previous to her marriage was Arvita Frances Knudson, and she is the daughter of Charles J. Knudson of No. 11 Dean street, Hartford, Ct., Mrs. Francis said:

I dislike very much to talk of this affair, but since the matter has been so terribly distorted I feel, in justice to myself and family, that a correct

Mystery in Fate of E. F. Commins, Morphine Victim in New York.

While the New York police are investigating the mysterious death from morphine of Edward F. Cummins of Somerville at the Times Square Hotel, the AMERICAN today found his relatives in Somerville.

Cummins was a star football player in the Somerville High School team four years ago. He was a brother of "Tom" Cummins of Roxbolo football fame. After leaving high school he went to Tufts Medical School till his father died, then with his brother, John Cummins, continued his father's milk business till a month ago when he secured a place as advance agent for a theatrical company.

He went to New York and lived at the Times Square Hotel. His last visit home was two weeks ago. He was expected for Thanksgiving Day but did not come.

An autopsy has been ordered. It was said he was a good spender in New York.

Wilson Abandons Panama Canal Trip

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—President Wilson today abandoned all idea of visiting the Panama Canal zone during the holidays. He will take no vacation unless the Senate pass the currency bill before Christmas. He probably will not visit Panama before the official opening of the canal in 1915.

WESTERN MEN QUIT RED SOX

By L. R. MURDOCH.

Joseph J. Lannin, wealthy hotel and apartment house owner of Jamaica Plain, Boston and Garden City, L. I., will succeed James R. McAleer as president of the Red Sox when he completes a deal for the one-half interest in the former world's champions held by McAleer, Secretary Robert B. McRoy and other Westerners. It is expected that the deal will be completed this week.

President Lannin, with the approval of the other owners, will continue Bill Carrigan as manager of the Sox.

John L. Taylor, who with his father, General Charles H. Taylor, was sole owner until they sold a half interest to the Westerners two years ago, will remain as vice-president. Mr. Taylor confirmed the story of the Lannin negotiations this afternoon, in the following statement:

Mr. Joseph J. Lannin of this city is negotiating for the one-half of the stock of the Boston American League Baseball Club, which is owned by Western men. He expects that the deal will be successfully consummated in a short time.

There has been no competition with my father or myself in connection with the transaction. It was entirely agreeable to us that Mr. Lannin should purchase the stock.

Runaways Smash Parker House Glass

Plunge Into Bar Window After Run From Tremont Place.

A heavy wagon was being loaded on Tremont place today. A basket, tossed into the wagon bounced over the seat and fell between the horses. They were frightened, ran into Beacon street and down to Tremont.

One horse tried to turn toward Tremont street and the other preferred to go straight down School. The result was a compromise, for they charged into the sidewalk and the pole of the wagon split a window of the Parker House bar. The horses were painfully cut.

Asks Mayor to Call Off City Workers

Walter Ballantyne, City Councilor and manager of Thomas J. Kenny's campaign for Mayor, served a formal demand upon Mayor Fitzgerald today to put a stop to the political activities of city employes during working hours.

"It has been a matter of common knowledge for weeks past," said Ballantyne, "that certain city employes have been busy during working hours in procuring the signatures of John F. Fitzgerald to the circulation of nomination papers and the collection of signatures."

Navy Yard Painters Appeal Wage Ruling

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—The painters at the Charlestown, Mass., navy yard, have filed a protest with Secretary of the Navy Daniels against the decision of the wage board denying them an increase in pay. The petitioners state that 1,800 Boston painters receive $4 a day and that under the law the navy painters are entitled to the same compensation as outside workmen engaged in the same line of business.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—A. Goldberg of Vancouver, B. C., an American dealer in second-hand warships, lost in the Supreme Court today his suit to compel Secretary of the Navy Daniels to deliver to him the condemned cruiser Boston, which Goldberg claimed to have purchased for $20,000.

FRESNO DAN AT AUTOPSY

Professor William M. Whitney of Harvard will examine the organs of William C. Russell to determine whether poison caused his death, it became known today following the autopsy performed on the body at the Russell home in Melrose.

Medical Examiner Roscoe Perley of Middlesex County and Dr. H. L. Houghton, representing the family, performed the autopsy.

MAKE THOROUGH EXAMINATION.

It was learned that the examination was most thorough. The heart and lungs were tested, the brain was inspected, and the stomach and intestines were removed to be sent to Professor Whitney.

District Attorney Higgins was at the house all morning and when he came out said:

"Fresno Dan is dead. He has been there since 6 o'clock this morning, as confirmed to Ally Mr. Portland Alert. The autopsy is now in progress."

Developments in the case were centered upon one another today. Attorney William H. Robinson produced a petition on behalf of Dakota Dan for an injunction restraining Ferdinand B. Ayer, executor of the Russell estate, from keeping Dakota and the Russell home. Developments of a new sort to break the will of William C. Russell on the part of Mrs. C. L. Leach of Brighton, sister of the dead man.

Leach Attorney Higgins went to the Russell home with a stenographer and took several statements. The purpose was started upon request of Mrs. Leach at the same time Dakota Dan issued a joint press statement.

It believe that my brother has been slain. He has been poisoned or murdered in some other manner.

Dan's Brain Examined.

Mrs. Leach was equally indignant at what she called the "flim." She said: "I have received no word of the arrangements for the funeral, because we are not in the 'ring.'" Mr. Ayer sent a detective named Galton out here to ask the neighbors about us. He will get his I have engaged counsel to represent us in this fight."

It was learned that Mrs. Leach retained Attorney Scanlon and asked him if he could act for her and for other relatives in demanding a representative at the autopsy and in demanding that William C. Russell's brain be examined to determine whether or not he was of "heroin" by persons addicted to the sine. She also asked if Mr. Scharton would act for her and other relatives in case they wanted to break the will.

"I do not want the money," she declared. "But I do want to see Daniel recognized."

Dr. Clarence B. Hoskins, chief of the Morgue Board of Health, said:

"No certificate of death has been filed, nor has any burial permit been issued." This was in reply to rumors that a secret burial would be planned as a result of Dakota Dan's statement that he would attend the funeral at all costs.

Eugene C. Upton, attorney, said that the will of William G. Russell would be made public after Fresno Dan—whom so called Daniel Blake Russell—returned from the West. Mr. Upton had not heard that Fresno arrived early today.

Dakota Dan's petition for an injunction against Mr. Almy was a sensation several days ago in the attorney for Mr. Russell's body. It brought the clash between Dakota and Almy squarely before the court.

In his petition Dr. Dakotan accused Almy of taking possession not only of the Russell home but of the body of William G. Russell. Dakota Dan asks that Almy be summoned to show cause why the Dakotan should not be permitted to enter the house and view the body of William G. Russell.

Dakota Dan declared that he will attend the Russell funeral despite Executor Almy's objections.

He declared further that when he leaves Fresno Dakota Dan and his wife East—he will choke the accepted brother."

The Dakotan's bitterness towards Fresno Dan led to a fear that the two will clash at the grave after the funeral. A sensation is expected to follow the laying of William C. Russell's will. This will be after the funeral.

After the will comes the authoritative, sworn inventory of the whole Russell estate. This will reveal the real secrets in the great will fight. It will be the first time the light of publicity is thrown on these important facts.

The exact worth of the estate, variously estimated between $250,000 and $300,000.

What the estate consists of.

Just how the estate has been drained by the two long battles in court, Dakota Dan.

What the trustees have drawn for salaries and expenses.

What enormous sums have been paid to lawyers.

How much of the estate has been expended for witnesses, detectives and the hordes of hangers-on and money-seekers of every kind.

Revelations Expected.

All these will tell why the Russell fortune in four years has dwindled from a half a million to perhaps but half that amount. In view of the fact that William Russell lived the life of a recluse and spent very little and that Fresno Dan received the meagre allowance of but $10 a week, the revelations of this inventory are expected to prove astonishing.

Startling correspondence may also become public.

It is pointed out that a disinterested administrator might expose not only such correspondence, but the details of the financial arrangements with Fresno Dan, of how Fresno was paid and the contents of the letters between William C. Russell and the lawyers in regard to any agreement with Fresno.

Friends of Dakota Dan declared today that an inventory, stringing out all these facts would set at rest all the rumors which have arisen in regard to the estate.

"My God, what can I do?" exclaimed Dakota Dan today. "They've taken my last dollar. They've driven me into the gutter. It seems that the only thing a man could do is to take a gatling gun and—d— them—stop them from any more brutalities.

"I am the real Daniel Blake Russell. The truth will come out. If not in this world, then before God. The truth will be known and I know it."

New Figure in Case.

Mrs. Fred Leach of Spring street, Stoneham, a cousin of William C. Russell, declared today that the public has a right to know how he and his wife died.

"When I demanded an inquiry, I spoke not only for other relations and myself, but for the public," she said. "Others were afraid to speak, so I stepped forward.

"Mr. Almy says there is no such thing as retribution on this earth. I guess he is right. If there was, he certainly would have a full dinner pail of it—more in fact than he and some of his friends could digest.

"I am not looking for money. I wouldn't take a cent of the Russell estate. I despise the mention of money in connection with it.

"I am not accusing anybody. But I did demand an inquiry to satisfy the public which has a right to know."

Strong guards continue to the residence at Melrose. Already "Dakota Dan," after a heated interchange of remarks, has been turned away. He declared he would return.

Mr. Almy was asked if he had ordered the guards to keep "Dakota Dan" away. He replied:

"Dakota Dan has no more right to enter the house than a stranger."

Asked if the Dakota claimant would be allowed at the funeral, Mr. Almy said:

"We don't want the gutternipes of Boston to be at the funeral, but we cannot prevent anybody from following the body to the grave."

"What will you do if 'Dakota Dan' tries to force his way into the house at the funeral?" was asked Mr. Almy.

"Well, he'd better not try," was the reply, "or he will see what is coming to him."

Woman Demands Autopsy.

This opportunity may come at the time of the funeral or the interment in Wyoming Cemetery.

"Dakota Dan" said today: "There will sure be a scene when I meet 'Fresno.'

"I intend to choke him. I don't see any other way to get arrested, and it is only in that way that I can hope to get a jury trial and leave my case to a dozen open-minded men. I can't say when it will happen, but it will be full of sensations when it does."

"I can sit here and see the day when I'll be on top of Cast hill, and when I'll skid the Almys down. I'll see the day, and not so very far off either, when I'll send back their card from the door when they come to me as supplicants.

"The time will come when citizens of Melrose, who used to go to the Russell house and play the game, and were welcome there but can't go there now, will be welcoming once more.

"If I can't get justice in the courts of Massachusetts I will go to the Attorney-General of the United States. If necessary, I shall watch the grave they bury him in myself to see that his body is not removed under cover of the darkness."

Seated in a kitchen chair in the home of James Curtis, swaying back and forth in his emotion, he ajudged epithet after epithet to the relatives as he recalled their refusal to allow him to attend the funeral of the man to whom he claims kinship.

The net that has been sent out over New England to catch the Typical American Girl, is being drawn closer and nearer.

Never before was there such a catch of beautiful faces, graceful features and delicate lines of figure and face. Never were there collected such attractive costumes and such a variety of types, all on one editor's desk.

Some of these beauties may be made more beautiful by the photographer's art, but the judges are portrait artists and accustomed to studying beneath the surface. They know studio tricks of light and shade, and they will not be foiled by a graceful pose or by an artificial smile. They will look for the real girl and she cannot escape them.

Among the judges is Mrs. Maris Dunforth Page, who has spent a large part of her professional career in painting portraits of beautiful children and young New England girls. She will not make a mistake and she will study each photograph with the searching eye of the trained artist. Mrs. Page has painted many children of well-known New Englanders and her judgment should be good, and she is to be helped by two more portrait painters of national fame, Ernest Lee Major and William Paxton.

There is still time for more pictures, and it is hoped that the most beautiful and typical girl in all New England will have her photograph ready, and she be prepared to sit before the best artist that the AMERICAN can secure for her oil portrait. It will not be cheap and it will be worth the trouble of sending in a photograph a thousand times over.

The prize, which will be presented to the "Typical American Girl" when she is elected by the judges in this great contest, will be a life-size oil portrait of herself, painted by a noted New England artist, from personal sittings.

MISS ELFRIEDA TOWNSEND of Providence. Many people in Rhode Island's largest city think the American need look no farther in its search for the Typical American Girl.

Four Men Shoot Up Newton from Auto

Police Fire Upon Gunmen, but Fail to Stop Them.

Four men in a high-powered touring car dashed through Newton and Wellesley early today, firing revolvers as their car speeded along at a forty-mile-an-hour rate. In Wellesley they eluded the chief of the Wellesley fire department, W.W. Diehl, who chased the "gunmen" into Weston.

Policeman David Cronin of Wellesley joined the chase. He fired two shots after the fleeing car. He was not sure whether or not he had hit one of the occupants.

Later the Wellesley police asked the assistance of the authorities of nearby towns and cities in running down the miscreants.

Miss Francis Files Faulkner Charges

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—Miss Ada M. Francis, postmistress at North Truro, Mass., whose conduct of the postoffice has been under investigation by the post-office department, today filed with the lighthouse board a complaint against George Faulkner, keeper of the station at Highland Light, Mass., who instigated the charges against her.

Miss Francis charges that Faulkner is incompetent and that his criticism of her conduct of the office is not based upon fact. Postmaster-General Burleson shortly will give a hearing upon the Faulkner charges and the Department of Commerce has arranged for a hearing upon the charges made by Miss Francis.

Exhibits Hair in Suit Against "L"

With a stack of her own hair piled up before her, Miss Irene Veronica Morrelly, twenty-five, of Providence, R. I., told Judge Brown and a jury in the Suffolk Superior Court today, that the hair has fallen out of her head as the result of injuries she received when a door of an "L" train in the Friend street station of the tunnel closed on her. Miss Morrelly was a teacher of violin in Providence. She is suing for $15,000.

Report Stover Is in New Orleans

NEW YORK, Dec. 1.—A dispatch from New Orleans today states that former Park Commissioner Charles B. Stover, who disappeared several weeks ago, has been found in that city. The dispatch quotes Mr. Stover as saying that he had not had a vacation in seven or eight years and left New York to get a rest.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—Representative Rogers of Massachusetts today named Lawrence B. Richardson of Methuen, Mass., for appointment to the Military Academy at West Point. Elmer R. Hill of Chelmsford, Mass., was designated as first alternate, and Harold Taylor of Stowe, Mass., as alternate.

MRS. FRANCIS TELLS WHY SHE TOOK POISON

version of the whole affair is necessary at this time.

I had just returned from New York City about this time last year when I was introduced to my husband in Hartford by a mutual friend. It was purely and simply a case of love at first sight. I thought Wallace was a fine chap and I was led to believe he cared for me a great deal.

At first I thought it foolish to think of marriage, but he was so persistent, I accepted him on the third day following our meeting. He was perfectly lovely and wouldn't listen to waiting. Instead, he said we would be married at his home the latter part of the year, so I agreed. We were married in Brockton, December 31, 1912, by Rev. C. Harley Smith, pastor of South Street Methodist Church.

All Sunshine at First.

We were happy for a few months and his family accepted me as their daughter. They seemed like very nice people, and all, including Wallace, were very kind to me. We never went out a great deal, but I was contented. Then, of a sudden, things began to change and I made frequent trips to my home in Hartford.

Through no fault of mine, little things happened and we quarreled. It was not at all serious—just a boy and girl "scrap." The things that followed I do not care to relate, but we lived at another place after them.

Wallace began to appear restless and we quarreled quite a little.

I called up his home on the phone and when one of the members of his family would answer and when I asked for Wallace, the voice would say: "You have the wrong number." I felt terrible over it and cried and cried.

Of a sudden he went away, saying nothing. I didn't hear from him for some time and of course felt badly. I couldn't understand what had come over him, excepting that his parents wished him to leave me. Then came a series of events, of letter writing by both of us, and I came to the West Elm Hotel to live. He wrote me and in return I wrote him, believing he would return and explain what the trouble was. He never came.

Soon Grew Despondent.

For days I waited for him and grew despondent and careful. I knew practically no one, so I read and sewed and—waited. My heart today replaces the Louisiana at Tuxpan, the latter vessel arriving at Vera Cruz. On the west coast the California has moved from Manzatlan to Manzanillo. The Annapolis has gone to Tolo-tampo.

General Huerta disappeared after leaving Chapultepec today for the National Palace. No trace of him could be found in his usual haunts, and this fact led to circulation of a report that he had left the city. For several hours government officials who had expected to confer with him at the palace waited in vain and then dispersed to their respective offices. None of the Cabinet ministers was able to offer any explanation of the dictator's disappearance and professed to be as much surprised as the lesser government attaches.

Then I made up my mind that life was not worth living. Thanksgiving Day came and it was the first Thanksgiving I had ever been away from home. I was terribly lonesome and thought I would go wild. I wanted to die, but fought off the feeling time and again. I love Wallace and he has no reason in the world why he should not return it. He did love me, I'm sure, until we came to live here.

I finally finished out Thanksgiving Day. I knew he was in town and it killed me to think he wouldn't come to me. I though he would come the next day.

Friday I received a telephone message from him and he told me that if I cared to see him I could do so in a week at my home in Hartford. I could not understand it and told him I would see him at my room here or nowhere. That conversation finished it. I knew the conclusion then and there that he did not love me, and then I planned to die.

I wrote a letter to him and one to my dear mother. I met a girl whom I knew and asked her to go to the theatre with me. The theatre was well filled and we had to sit in different rows. I had not seen a drama in which the husband takes poison; in fact I had only seen part of a comical moving picture. The scene did not interest me one way or the other then. I took a drink from a can of aconite, which I had purchased at a drug store, presumably for a cold, and performed in my act.

Now Glad to Live.

I began to burn up. My body seemed to tingle and my mouth and throat burned terribly. I told the girl what I had done and why I had done it. I cried, "I want to die," and I did—then. A doctor came. I was then taken to the hospital. I did not suffer any ill effects, except that I am terribly weak.

I feel now that it was foolish, but I just couldn't help it. Now I can see that there are brighter things ahead and that there are bright things for everyone in this life, no matter how dark the present seems.

I believe a woman should stand by a husband, no matter what he does. I was willing to take him back. He has demonstrated now that he does not care what happens to me, for I have not heard a word from either he or his family.

Life is a beautiful thing and I am going to start again—only along a different line. I feel happy to know I am all right and will be myself again soon.

We have been practically apart for three months and not once in the four letters I have written in answer to as many from him, have I alluded to the quarrel we had.

Jury in the Salem Police Case Chosen

Trial opened today in the Superior Criminal Court, Salem, Judge Pratt presiding, of the $20,000 libel suit filed by Captain John J. Carr of the Salem police force, against former Mayor Rufus D. Sibley.

The suit grew out of Pratt's alleged refusal, when mayor, to approve of the eligibility of Carr's promotion to the captaincy. Carr then being a sergeant. The plaintiff alleges Pratt wrote a letter opposing Carr's promotion.

When Mayor Hurley entered office he made Carr a captain. The jury was selected today and D. N. Crowley read the declaration for the plaintiff. General William A. Pew and Robert W. Hill are counsel for the defence.

WOMEN JOIN GEN. VILLA'S REBEL ARMY

EL PASO, Tex., Dec. 1.—There are 200 Americans in Chihuahua city, whose lives will be endangered if they remain in there after General Villa invests the city.

The rebel general said today that he would probably leave Juarez in person tomorrow with the remainder of his troops and his artillery.

Before Chihuahua city is reached, he said, all foreigners and non-combatants would be warned to leave.

Women may play an important part in the fighting in the State of Chihuahua from now on, as Villa gave permission to a number of women volunteers to arm themselves and join the constitutionalist army as regular soldiers.

If the constitutionalists win, many army officers will demand that the franchise be conferred upon women for the work they have done in behalf of the rebel cause.

FOREIGN INVESTORS HAVE LOST $250,000,000 BY MEXICAN WARFARE

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 1.—Civil war in Mexico has cost foreign investors $250,000,000 during the past year, it was estimated here today. The loss includes actual destruction of property and paralysis of business.

The chief sufferer from actual destruction is the National railways system, which penetrates the region north of Mexico City, where insurgent activity has been greatest. The heaviest fall heaviest upon American, British and French investors.

In addition to ravages of ranches in the North and South owned by foreign capital the companies sustaining heavy damage are: The National Railway System, the Pearson Syndicate, the Green Copper interests, the Aguilar Oil Company, the Waters-Pierce Oil Interests and privately owned mining properties.

The Interoceanic Railway, connecting Vera Cruz and Mexico City, has suffered least from rebel depredations. Corporations owning properties in Morelos, Chihuahua, Sonora and Sinaloa have been hardest hit. Statistics compiled here from private dispatches and from official reports to the government show that the damage to foreign owned property went to $1,000,000 a day during the disturbances of the past year.

That the United States government is keeping a watchful eye on the situation at Tuxpan is evidenced by movements of vessels in Mexican waters. The New Jersey today replaces the Louisiana at Tuxpan, the latter vessel arriving at Vera Cruz. On the west coast the California has moved from Manzatlan to Manzanillo. The Annapolis has gone to Tolotampo.

Suffragists Take Up Raise in Dues

Star Chamber Session Also Considers Publishing Plan.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—Behind locked doors the executive committee of the National American Woman Suffrage Association today took up the problem of whether the national party shall increase its revenues by imposing larger dues on its member bodies.

The committee also took under consideration a plan for the formation of a national suffrage publishing company for the publication of all suffrage literature in this country.

Congress Convenes in Regular Session

Both Houses Continue Business With But Little Ceremony.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—The extraordinary session of the sixty-third Congress ended at noon today and the first regular session at once began. The House had already concluded its work of the old session, but the Senate held a fifteen-minute executive session during the forenoon, adjourning from 10:55 to 11:55.

At the executive session the Senators confirmed ten postmasters, but they failed to act on more than 100 appointments which President Wilson had made. To secure their confirmation the President will have to send in the names again.

In the Senate at 11:59 Vice-President Marshall announced that the hour for the convening of the regular session of Congress under the terms of the constitution had arrived and declared the extraordinary session adjourned sine die.

Speaker Clark called to order the first regular session of the House. For the first time in two months a quorum was present.

OF GREAT USE IN BREAKING UP COLDS

Kellogg's Tasteless Castor Oil Is a Thing Long Desired

Every one knows the value of castor oil in breaking up fall and winter colds, but most people have found it hard to take.

Kellogg's Tasteless Castor Oil does away with this only objection. It is pure, simple castor oil without taste or odor. Nothing is added; nothing can be taken out.

In making castor oil tasteless, Spencer Kellogg & Son of Buffalo have done away with the old evil-tasting, evil-smelling kind. It operates pleasantly, without griping, and does not upset the stomach. Children take it easily.

Do not confuse Kellogg's Tasteless Castor Oil with prepared, mixed or flavored castor oils. It is the only pure, tasteless kind. Sold in all drug stores, not in bulk, but in 25c and 50c sizes. The public is protected by the trade mark—a green castor leaf, bearing the signature—Kellogg's.

Made only by Spencer Kellogg & Sons, Inc., Buffalo, oil refiners.

PIMPLY? WELL, DON'T BE!

People Notice It. Drive Them Off With Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets.

A pimply face will not embarrass you much longer if you get a package of Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets. The skin should begin to clear after you have taken them for a few nights.

Cleanse the blood, the bowels and the liver with Olive Tablets.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are the successful substitute for calomel—there's never any sickness or pain after using them.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets do that which calomel does, and just as effectually, but their action is gentle and safe instead of severe and irritating.

No one who takes Olive Tablets is ever nauseated. They are purely vegetable, and produce a gentle, thorough, but easy feeling. constipation, torpid liver, has disappeared promptly here.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are a purely vegetable compound mixed with olive oil, as you will know them for their olive color.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are among patients afflicted with liver and bowel complaints and Olive Tablets are the commonsense way to quit.

Take one or two nights for a week. See how much better you feel and look. 10c and 25c per box. The Olive Tablet Company, Columbus, O.

URGE CURFEW TO AID EAST BOSTON CRUSADE

East Boston folk at a meeting in Fitton Hall tomorrow night will take up an active and strenuous campaign to protect the girls and children of East Boston. A committee of twenty-five will conduct the fight, and Haines, New and Cross streets will be the centres of attack.

There are many suggestions as to the most effective way to protect the young. Here are some of these which have found the most enthusiastic support:

Give the police canes with which to thrash hoodlums and minor street offenders.

Establish a State curfew law.

Provide for more adequate tenement inspection.

Send visitors to instruct parents on social morality, sex hygiene and home building.

East Boston merchants, business men and social leaders are taking up the fight. Here are some views gathered today:

D. McDOUGALL, Meridian street:

It seems to me that we can remedy conditions by a curfew law. Such a law is of no use unless it is rigidly enforced, however.

I would give some of these abnormal men a lecture, and either send them to prison with a good sentence or put them under heavy bonds.

Someone has to be punished. I think that the parents are more to be censured than the children.

CARL GUNNELL, real estate dealer, Meridian street:

Children grow up today and do not care for anyone. They do not obey their parents. They do just what they like. They talk loud on the streets, they have no respect for their elders and do things for which my parents would have taken the hide off my back.

Let us have a curfew law.

Let us have better homes.

Let us have more police protection.

Let us turn every respectable citizen into a detective, watching over the children.

Fight the evil and beat it.

S. LYON, a merchant, No. 27 Meridian street:

The children can be cured by the parents. Make the parents stay at home in the evenings and guard their babies.

I think that the fault lies entirely with the parents, and when you get them looking after their children more than they do, you will find few of the scandalous cases as frequent today.

JOSEPH R. CLINE, insurance, Meridian street:

A caning might do some of these youngsters good. We are not so bad over here in East Boston as they are in other sections of this State.

I believe that the policemen should be allowed to thrash the young ones that are out after 9 o'clock in the evening. A good, sound thrashing from a policeman will end some of this trouble.

DR. A. J. BULGER, Meridian street:

You know that there is only one remedy for the social irregularities among children.

Give them religious instruction. Let them have the love of God drilled into them.

Give this religious training with such effect that some of it will stick to the child and not all fall off. I don't care where the child goes to church, just so he goes.

PRESIDENT GEORGE W. HARGRAVE, Sumner Savings Bank:

We must have some practical way of dealing with this evil. It strikes me that to have some good visitor go into the homes where the difficulty exists and give the parents a good straight talk is going to do a lot of good.

Just talk to the parents and tell them what they are allowing their children to do. Give them the advice that they sorely need.

PRESIDENT FISK H. WOOD of the Columbia Trust Company, Meridian street:

The condition may be serious, and we all know something about the details. But it can be easily handled. I thoroughly believe in a State curfew law and it must be enforced. This may not be a complete remedy, but I think that it is worthy of trial.

Parents might be urged to look after their children and a campaign among the parents might do something to improve the situation.

MRS. THAW TRIES TO STOP EVELYN FROM DANCING "MARIETTE"

Evelyn Thaw in One of Her Latest Poses.

Mother of Matteawan Fugitive Makes Protest in Home Town of Pittsburgh.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Dec. 1.—Evelyn Thaw will not be allowed to present "Mariette," her startling dancing and pantomime act, in which she is booked to appear at a local theatre tonight, if the Thaw family can prevent it.

Mrs. Mary Copley Thaw, Harry Thaw's mother, is at her home here. She is a woman of wide influence in Pittsburgh, and through the Thaw lawyers, who include former Governor William A. Stone, can bring strong influence to bear upon the Mayor and chief of police.

It is even possible that the help of Senator Oliver's law office may be enlisted, since Mr. Stone was formerly associated with Senator Oliver.

The first step in the fight to end Evelyn's performance began when she left the Pittsburg station upon her arrival yesterday. Two detectives took up her trail and have kept in close touch with her since then.

Mrs. Mary Copley Thaw feels acutely the notoriety the case has brought upon the family. She has always been extremely sensitive where Evelyn is concerned. Evelyn Thaw's dancing act is pretty and graceful, but goes a little further than is contenanced as "the thing" in the swellest Pittsburgh society.

Mrs. Thaw, senior, is a devotee of church-

Says Earle Found Son in Wire Cage

Mother of "Affinity" Artist Explains the Kidnaping.

NEW YORK, Dec. 1.—Although private detectives in Europe and the United States have searched for three weeks, the whereabouts of F. Pianey Earle, who is accused of kidnaping his son, Harold in France, are still a mystery. Mrs. Lilly J Earle, mother of the "affinity" artist, explained today that Harold had been taken away by his father because of ill treatment.

"A month before the kidnaping my son was in Paris preparing to have a book published," said Mrs. Earle. "He went down to Lamotte-Beuvron to see Harold and found the boy in a wire cage. Harold's clothes were filthy and his manners frightful. He looked and acted like a savage little beast. Mme. Fischbacher is a peasant. We have proof that she neglected the boy."

Woman Wins Battle Against Mercury

NEW YORK, Dec. 1.—Cured of bichloride of mercury poisoning without resort to the surgeon's knife, Mrs. Ada Weisberger, thirty-eight, was removed from Bushwick Hospital and is today at her home in Brooklyn.

Her battle for life lasted twenty-one days. She had swallowed fifteen grains of the subtle poison by mistake for cough medicine, November 9.

The treatment, which physicians throughout the country have been watching earnestly, and which they hope will result in the saving of many more lives, consisted mainly in wrapping the patient in hot packs.

Undraped Posing Causes Stir in Paris

Cabinet Minister's ex-Wife Seen in "Studies" by Leaders of Art World.

PARIS, Dec. 1.—A social sensation has been caused here by the undraped plastic poses by Madame Valentine De Saint Point, the divorced wife of a French cabinet minister, granddaughter of the Marquis Den Glana De Cesiat, and a descendant of the poet and historian, Lamartine.

The spectacle was given in her huge studio, No. 19 Avenue de Tourville in the Champs de Mars quarter. Some three hundred invitations were sent out to leading men and women in the literary and artistic world. There was not a single refusal.

Madame De Saint Point, who is known as Madame Valentine, has a fine figure, pale blue eyes, and a mass of chestnut hair. She is also a writer of books and plays as well as a talented painter.

Anne Morgan Scores Christmas Grafting

FORD HALL ASKS BAN ON HANGING MRS. WAKEFIELD

A large gathering at Ford Hall, after listening to Angelo Morgan recite her recently published poem, "Shall She Pay With Her Life?" unanimously voted that a petition be sent Governor Baldwin of Connecticut, asking him to commute the death sentence of Mrs. Bessie Wakefield, who is condemned to be hanged for complicity in the slaying of her husband.

George W. Coleman, who put the motion, gave a short account of the effort being made by the AMERICAN and humane societies throughout New England and other parts of the country, to save the life of the condemned woman. He said:

"I see by your applause Ford Hall is of but one opinion concerning Mrs. Wakefield and I therefore ask that everyone in favor of sending a petition to Governor Baldwin asking him to commute the sentence of Mrs. Wakefield to answer by saying yes." The hall responded from balcony to stage with a cry of "Yes." Coleman announced that the vote was as nearly unanimous as Ford Hall ever gives to any cause.

Miss Morgan's reading was followed by the speaker of the evening, Peter Clark Macfarlane, who gave a high tribute to the author and her poem. The life of Mr. Macfarlane's talk was, "The Courage to Attack."

DELUGE GOVERNOR WITH PETITIONS AGAINST HANGING

HARTFORD, Ct., Dec. 1.—Extra help is necessary each forenoon at Governor Baldwin's office to handle and classify the mass of petitions against hanging Mrs. Bessie Wakefield, who will be the first woman since 1788 to face a hangman in Connecticut. The petitions come from every State in the Union and are signed mostly by women.

Mrs. Wakefield has written to Mrs Besserman, matron at the New Haven County Jail. In her letter Mrs. Wakefield expressed nervousness and interest in the affairs the two had talked of in New Haven, and said:

"I have a nice little room here and every one is so good and kind to me. I have a lovely mattress. She is so good and kind. I like her very much. I don't want for anything. Everyone is very good."

Nineteen reasons why Bessie Wakefield should not be hanged on March 4, and why she should equitably have a new trial, were filed today with the clerk of the Supreme Court of Errors by attorney Thomas F. Devine of Waterbury, counsel for the condemned woman.

Among the reasons cited by Devine why a new trial should be granted are:

That Mrs. Wakefield's confession to the coroner should not be admitted.

That the jury was not charged on the law in case it believed Mrs. Wakefield had abandoned her original murderous intention.

Mother Stanislaus Tells of Recovery

Throat Troubles, like continued coughs and colds, often seriously affect the lungs. If you have not found any improvement from the treatment you have tried, investigate the many reports showing benefits, and, in numerous cases, complete recoveries, brought about by the use of Eckman's Alterative. This is a medicine for Throat and Lung Troubles, favorably known for more than fifteen years. Read this case—

Convent of St. Anne, Sanford, Fla.

"Gentlemen: In February, 1913, four doctors examined my throat and pronounced the necessity of an operation. Having heard of Peekskill, N. Y., Catholic Sanitarium of the Sisters of St. Francis, where I was visiting, Sisters of Eckman's Alterative, I determined as a last resort to try it. After taking three or five bottles large pieces of diseased tissue came away. I continued the Alterative, to my grateful and daily relief. In ten months I was restored to perfect health, so I would be glad to write or talk to any person who may have a doubt about it. I would like them to see and hear from my own lips, if they so desire, all I would say of it."

(Signed) MOTHER M. STANISLAUS.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious for severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Contains no narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. Sold by leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

$1,108,681,777 ASKED TO RUN GOVERNMENT

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 1.—Congress was called upon today, at the opening of the regular session, to appropriate more than $1,000,000,000 for the running expenses of the government for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1914. Estimates transmitted by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo to Speaker Champ Clark aggregated $1,108,681,777.62. Appropriations made by Congress at the last regular session totalled $1,074,305,960.73. The increase is $34,375,907.29.

The greatest increase will be in the postoffice department, which asks $266,953,117 as against appropriations of $253,441,271 last year. The pension bill set alone is expected to show a substantial decrease. The estimates by departments and last years appropriations follow:

	Estimates 1915	Appropriations 1914

"CASCARETS" THE BEST LAXATIVE

If constipated, bilious, headachy, Stomach sour—Clean up to-night!

Get a 10-cent box now.

You men and women who can't get feeling right—who have headache, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath, dizziness, can't sleep, are bilious, nervous and upset, bothered with a sick, gassy, disordered stomach, or have backache and feel worn out.

Are you keeping your bowels clean with Cascarets, or merely forcing a passageway every few days with salts, cathartic pills or castor oil?

Cascarets work while you sleep; cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested, fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry out the system all the constipated waste matter and poison in the bowels.

A Cascaret tonight will straighten you out by morning—a 10-cent box from any drug store will keep your stomach sweet; liver and bowels regular, and head clear for months. Don't forget the children. They love Cascarets because they taste good—never gripe or sicken.

Compel Railroads to Give Accounting

Supreme Court Approves Order of Interstate Board.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—A compulsory system of railroad accounting prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission to all railroad lines under its jurisdiction was formally approved in a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States today. The Kansas City Southern Railroad objected to it on the ground it was unreasonable.

The commission ordered the Kansas City Southern Railroad to charge a certain proportion of expenditures incurred in eliminating grades on the road to "operating expenses" instead of to "surplus" and "property accounts."

Uphold $2,000 Fine on Delaware Road

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—A fine of $2,000 imposed on the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad for alleged violation of the commodities clause of the Interstate commerce act, was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States today. The railroad was convicted in the federal court of Buffalo, N. Y., of transporting hay from Black Rock, N. Y., to Scranton, Pa., to be used in feeding mules in its coal mines there.

U. S. to Pay Subsidy to Cable Company

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—The Supreme Court decided today that the United States Government has to pay a subsidy to the Eastern Extension, Australasia & China Telegraph Company, a British corporation, operating a cable line from the Philippines to Hong Kong, China. This corporation entered into an agreement with the Spanish government of the Philippine Islands prior to American acquisition of the Islands to build and operate a cable line.

Affirm Right to Seize Fraud Goods

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—The Supreme Court today affirmed the right of the United States customs officers to seize and declare forfeited goods imported under fraudulent consular invoices and undervalued by the consignors, even though the consignee may be entirely innocent of any wrong.

Tax Raise on Mining Concerns Upheld

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—That the government is entitled under the federal corporation tax law to collect increased sums of revenue from mining corporations operating in the United States was the substance of an opinion by the Supreme Court today.

Sustain Law Taxing Credit Companies

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—The Supreme Court of the United States today decided that the Kentucky law taxing credit companies $100 annually was constitutional and therefore is not an interference with the interstate commerce regulations.

Hold Illinois Child Labor Law Valid

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—A child labor law of Illinois, which prohibits the employment of boys under sixteen years of age at dangerous occupations, was declared valid in a decision of the Supreme Court today.

Love Story of Evelyn and Harry Thaw

CHAPTER LXXXIV.

"The whole machinery of the State, all the apparatus of the system, and its varied workings, end in simply bringing twelve good men into a box." — Lord Brougham.

The entire second week of the Thaw trial was consumed by an heroic and finally successful effort to complete the jury.

The twelfth juror was not secured until 4:37 Friday afternoon, February 1. The actual trial began on Wednesday, January 22, so eight court days were required to find twelve men acceptable to both sides. The jury, as completed, was composed of the following men:

Foreman—Deming B. Smith, 55 years, retired manufacturer, married.

No. 2—George Pfaff, 34, hardware, married.

No. 3—Charles H. Feeke, 45, shipping agent, married.

No. 4—Oscar H. Pink, 46, salesman, married.

No. 5—Henry C. Harney, 50, planer, married.

No. 6—Harry C. Brearley, 35, advertising agent, married.

No. 7—Malcolm S. Fraser, 40, salesman, married.

No. 8—Charles D. Newton, 75, retired official, married.

No. 9—Wilbur S. Steele, 60, manufacturer, married.

No. 10—John S. Dennee, 38, freight agent, unmarried.

No. 11—Joseph S. Bolton, 57, clerk, married.

No. 12—Bernard Gerstman, 36, manufacturer's agent, married.

Beyond question, everyone connected with the trial was glad when Juror No. 12 was accepted and had taken his seat in the box.

Jerome and Hartridge had asked hundreds of questions, seeking out the fitness of each talesman from their respective standpoints.

300 Talesmen Questioned.

Over 300 talesmen were examined before the jury was completed. The principal reason for this was the obvious unwillingness of talesmen to be accepted. This was more and more noticeable as the case went on.

There was nothing to prevent the talesmen from reading the newspapers. They found a good many stories about the plight of the jurors so far chosen, especially in the Monday morning accounts of the fifth Sunday of the seven men chosen the opening week.

This seclusion of himself for an indefinite period on jury duty was a highly attorney prospect to the average citizen and all sorts of excuses were made to avoid duty.

Many talesmen, of course, were unavailable for legitimate reasons. Thaw, for instance, would suffer no architects to serve.

Men in or connected with the theatrical profession were challenged for cause or peremptorily on account of friendships they might have formed.

Other talesmen eagerly produced medical certificates that they were suffering from ailments which would be perilously aggravated by jury duty.

Still others obtained excuse on the ground of large business interests which would suffer. Others were dismissed because neither side would have them.

Spectators who followed closely the questions put to the talesmen gained the impression that the defence was seeking an emotional jury, while the prosecution wished one of the "hard-hearted" variety, so to speak. The result was rather a compromise. The jury, when completed, struck experienced court followers as an average one, neither too cold, nor too susceptible.

It was noticed that the jury box held only one bachelor. He was No. 10—Juror Dennee, a freight agent.

Comment was made by a photographer who saw the jury that a composite photograph of the twelve men in the box would show an American face with a faint suggestion of German-Hebraic type, of stolidly middle age, of kindly expression and with a leaning toward justice, rather than charity.

The defence used up all the thirty peremptory challenges which are allowed it by law and had to "borrow," as it were. A legal subterfuge was used to accomplish this. At first both sides agreed to ten "supplementary" challenges [illegible] this was discarded as possibly illegal. Then agreement was reached that talesmen to which either side objected should be excused "by consent." This method was used before the jury box was filled.

A little fill between opposing counsel occurred when a talesman named Townsend was being questioned. Townsend said he had been "spoken to" regarding the case. Instantly Assistant District Attorney Garvan was on the trail of possible interference with the case. He asked Townsend if he knew the man who had "spoken" to him. Townsend did not.

Then Garvan called out:

"Edgar O'Mara, stand up!"

There was a general craning of necks as the big Pittsburgh detective and former chief of police arose from a rear seat. It was well known that O'Mara was a family detective for the Thaws.

Is that the man who spoke to you?" asked Garvan of the talesman.

State Must Show Hand.

Hartridge objected sharply, as not before Townsend answered, saying O'Mara from any communicate with him. Hartridge did not like the assumption that Garvan's manner at all. He took up the examination of Townsend for jury duty and gave Gvan a friend for his Oliver by calling upon Chief Hammond of Jerome's doctives to stand up. Townsend said hmmond was not the man who had approached him, either, and Hartridge having squared the deal with Garvan, a satisfied. As it happened, Townsend was finally accepted because he said he had twice nominated Jerome for candidate for District-Attorney at an election.

Attorney Garvan was on the trail of possible interference with the case. He asked Townsend if he knew the man who had "spoken" to him. Townsend did not.

Then Garvan called out:

"Edgar O'Mara, stand up!"

Streets Cleared in Indianapolis Strike

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 1.—Disorders of minor proportions occurred early today in the strike of 3,126 teamsters and chauffeurs, when the several large baking companies sent out morning delivery wagons, but the crowds were quickly dispersed by the police. Mayor Wallace said he would take personal charge of the police department until the strike is settled. He said he expected to be able to handle the situation without assistance from the State. The new Mayor issued a proclamation warning all persons without necessary business in the streets to remain indoors under penalty of arrest.

New York Upheld on Bank Stock Tax

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—The Supreme Court of the United States today decided that the City of New York has the right to tax bank stock owned by banks of other States. The question was brought before the court by the Amoskeag Savings Bank of Manchester, N. H., with a view to determining the validity of the New York law taxing bank shares when owned by citizens of other States.

PANAMA FAIR WINS FAVOR IN GREAT BRITAIN

LONDON, Dec. 1.—According to the London Times the prospects for Britain's participation in the Panama fair are now brighter. The government is inclined to support a revised scheme at a cost of £500,000, instead of £1,250,000, which was the original estimate.

The new scheme would comprise official participation and supervision, a central government pavilion and a collective industrial exhibition.

If the government consents, the unofficial committee which has been working for that object, will be prepared to supplement the government's special inducements and the unfortunate effect in the United States of Britain's refusal to participate have been the leading arguments used, in the movement.

WIDOW'S FIGHT FOR HOME AT CLIMAX TODAY

By CONSTANCE WILLIAMS.

A little grey haired woman with tired eyes and a faded dress opened the door of the humble cottage at No. 48 Corey street, Charlestown, and ushered me into the tiny humble parlor with a smile. "Mrs. Mulhern?" I queried and she nodded timidly, it seemed to me, as she pushed forward one of the worn plush chairs and bade me be seated.

"Yes, I may be driven out—that is, it isn't exactly that, he has merely bought the $600 mortgage on the place, secured possession, and had his lawyer write me that I must vacate today.

"I can't leave! I want to die here! It is my old home—as poor as it appears. It is all we have,"—and she waved a thin hand towards the adjoining room where her aged and semi-blind brother, seventy years old, a veteran of the war, a son Leon and a daughter Julia were moving about.

The HE referred to is James T. Mulhern of Malden, a stepson, to prevent whom from evicting her, Mrs. Julia Mulhern has petitioned the Superior Court.

She had been "Jim" Mulhern's second bride. Jim, the father of James R., was a hard working man evidently with a few lines of romance still concerned when she met him.

The house at No. 48 was his—that is encumbered with the mortgage. Since that bright day so long ago the little woman had worked hard, very hard at times, she said, for poverty too often pressed close, to keep the interest paid on that $600.

"I have paid $1,600 interest on it in all, she finally finished.

Four years ago "Jim," the husband, died without leaving a will. The three-story house at No. 48 Corey street and the seven-room cottage in the rear were included under the mortgage. At most it was a poor legacy. Assessed for $2,600 all told, it was home to this widow and mother. She battled on to maintain it. The interest along with the other necessities came with difficulty but somehow it came. Her daughter was earning five dollars a week. That helped some.

It remained hers until calamity befel in the form of a letter from a Boston attorney telling her that she must leave the home for good—that it belonged to her stepson. One little alternative was offered. The home at No. 48 must be vacated anyway, but Mrs. Mulhern was to be permitted to live in the little cottage in the rear providing she paid a rental of $1 a week and would agree to eject her aged brother and her son. That was the straw that broke the camel's back—according to the little old lady.

"It could never be," she said, "I must protect my own. I shall not yield in the least. The court perhaps will aid me. I am praying that it will.

Farrar Suffering Nervous Depletion

Physicians Say Difficulty is Only Temporary.

NEW YORK, Dec. 1.—Friends of Miss Geraldine Farrar, whose marvelous voice has charmed countless thousands, are alarmed at her difficulty in singing her opera roles. She was manifestly near a breakdown in the performance of "Faust" on Saturday, when she sang against the advice of her physician. Inquiry made by the AMERICAN will reassure these friends.

"Miss Farrar is suffering from nervous depletion," said Dr. H. Holbrook Curtis, her physician. "It is an ailment that often complicates la grippe. Her vocal chords are unimpaired, and she will soon be able to sing as well as ever."

"Her voice and her technique are both better than ever, save for this slight temporary difficulty," declared William Gaard of the Metropolitan. "There is no breakdown. She simply overestimated her vitality."

Ask New Boylston Street Car Route

Scores Protest Annoying Delay on Cambridge Line.

Petitions have been circulated by scores of persons who use Beacon street, Commonwealth avenue and Cambridge cars via Park street subway and Boylston street, for relief from "the present annoying delay caused by the passage of cars by the devious route now taken from the subway to Boylston street."

The petitioners ask that these lines of cars be sent to and from the Park street subway by way of Arlington street and Newbury street to Massachusetts avenue. They claim this would give greater freedom and save time and congestion.

Convinced of Plot to Smuggle Chinese

Immigration Commissioner George B. Billings today said, in commenting on the detention of three "Japanese," two of whom proved to be Chinamen, who arrived on the liner Hamburg yesterday:

"I am convinced there was a conspiracy to smuggle them into the United States and I will probably take steps in the matter. I never heard of the plan being tried elsewhere—certainly not at this port."

BEAT EGG COST BY RAISING HENS, URGES CASSIDY

Mr. Cassidy tells you today how you can make a practical fight against paying an exorbitant price for eggs. He advises the small householder to go into the hen-raising business.

By HARRY P. CASSIDY.

Raise your own hens, have your own fresh eggs and beat the egg trust out of their exorbitant profits.

It's one of the best and simplest ways I know of to lower the high cost of living. It doesn't take much capital and the returns are worth while.

There seems to be a false impression about being allowed to keep hens in the city. People think they are liable for keeping a nuisance.

Anyone can keep hens, providing a permit is secured from the city Board of Health. The only objection is that the Board of Health hands over prosecution in case of a nuisance to the police.

The chief objection to keeping hens in a thickly settled community is the noise made by the rooster in his early morning crowing.

Here's a way to obviate that trouble. Cut out the rooster. It's the rooster that makes a fertile egg and fertile eggs won't keep as long as infertile ones anyway.

It would be interesting to know what inspired the passage of the city ordinance respecting keeping hens. I would almost examine the belief that the packers had a hand in it.

You recall that back home in the country everyone kept hens. There were certain seasons of the year when perhaps they didn't overwork themselves laying eggs. There was almost certain to be enough for the family table in the worst seasons.

And what a difference there was to those eggs and the eggs we now get as "strictly fresh" at seventy cents a dozen. Even in the market section the other day I saw eggs labeled strictly fresh that you would tell at a glance had come from storage.

Again, hens raised at home mean the elimination of much of the cost of the Sunday dinner. Keeping your own hens, there's always a Sunday dinner running around in the yard which is yours for the dressing.

Many a family in Greater Boston has plenty of yard space for a clean, well-ventilated hen coop.

It's a practical way to start an individual protest against the packers who are robbing you by speculating and raising to inflated prices the cost of eggs.

Winchester Wife Sues for Divorce

MELLEN WOULD LEAD UNION MEN OF B. & M. ROAD

The world of organized labor and today heavily discussing the startling scene presented when Charles S. Mellen, deposed head of the New Haven system, announced his readiness to become an adviser, or even leader, of unionists.

The offer came at a banquet in Mellen's honor at the American House given by the employees of the Boston & Maine.

The meeting adopted these resolutions:

"Charles Sanger, Mellen, ex-president of the Boston & Maine Railroad, after long and distinguished service, has retired from railroad work and whereas as president of said railroad his dealings and relations with its employes were, in an eminent degree, marked by fairness, justice and a broad humanitarian spirit, it is deemed fitting and just that a memorial thereof be made.

"Therefore, at a meeting of employes of the Boston & Maine Railroad, holden in Boston November 30, 1913, it was

"Resolved: That in appreciation of his broad and comprehensive manner with which he has dealt with the problems arising between the company and its employes, and of the fair, honorable and just treatment he has received at his hands, the thanks and good will of the employes be tendered Charles Sanger, Mellen."

The former head of the system acknowledged the tribute with tears in his eyes, saying:

"I think this a unique and most unusual thing for the president of a railroad—an iceberg with frost on his whiskers—to receive from those who were supposed to be hostile to all representatives of capital, such a testimonial.

"I would like to lead you. I would like to advise you. I want to help you. And the time will come when possibly I can, and when you call, I shall not be found wanting."

OPERA HOUSE CONCERT GIVES MANY DELIGHT

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

That a popular program will attract the people was demonstrated at the Boston Opera House last evening when, with the tremendous star announced to sing, the largest audience that has attended a Sunday Opera concert for a long while crowded into the theatre.

The house was practically sold out, with the exception of a few of the boxes, and the season of popular concerts began most auspiciously.

Miss Elizabeth Amsden, soprano, Jessie Shuyler Morse, contralto; Vincent Maroconi, baritone, and Vincente Ballester, tenor, were the singers, and the Boston Opera House orchestra, Horace Britt and Arcadio Schiroli, conductors, participated.

The program was entirely operatic, and awakened a degree of enthusiasm such as is rarely seen in an opera house. The artists were recalled again and again, and practically every number had to be repeated.

Vincente Ballester, the tenor, was recalled a dozen times, and compelled to give three encores. Ballester was very much in his element. Despite a slight gained confidence as the public approved of him. He has a lyric tenor voice of fine in quality and a pleasant appearance. With more experience he should prove a valuable acquisition to the opera house.

Elizabeth Amsden was given an exceptional opportunity to display her wonderful voice in "The Bird's Prayer" from "Tannhäuser" and the Polonaise from "Mignon." She never disappointed, and made a most favorable impression.

Maroconi came several French and Russian songs and was most appointed. Madame Jessie Morse sang the Cornelius aria from "Mignon," with fine tone and artistic feeling. She was also admirable in the duet with Miss Amsden, the Barcarolle from "Hoffman."

The orchestra played the intermezzo from the "Jewels of the Madonna" and the "William Tell" overture very effectively.

MRS. BAT NELSON, wife of the pugilist, who is reported to have left him because she doesn't like his home town.

'Bat' and Wife in Break at Hegewisch

Pugilist's Home Town, She Says, "No Bane Gude."

"Bat" Nelson and his little wife have separated again. This will come as a surprise to those who saw them in Boston only a few months ago, for at that time, the Battler and Mrs. Battler were living happily in a Huntington avenue flat, and Mrs. Battler was most delightfully cooking meals of fried eggs for an adoring husband, who was then training for his fight with Billy Nixon.

But now they have separated, according to dispatches from the West.

It all happened over the town of Hegewisch, which, Mrs. Bat declares, "no bane a vary gude place." Bat took his wife and Father Nelson to Chicago, blew them to a first-class feed, put Mrs. Bat on a train for Portland, Ore., and made his way back to Hegewisch with Father Nelson. And that, as Kipling says, was the end of Mr. and Mrs. Bat's married life. That is, according to the Battler.

Limber up. Quit complaining. Get a small trial bottle of "St. Jacobs Oil" from any drug store, and in just a moment you'll be free from rheumatic pain, soreness and stiffness. Don't suffer! Relief and a cure awaits you. "St. Jacobs Oil" is just as good for sciatica, neuralgia, lumbago, backache, sprains and swellings.

U. S. Watches School Plan in Fitchburg

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—The government has just completed, through its educational experts, a study of the "cooperative system" used by the schools in Fitchburg, Mass., which allows a youth to alternate his work in school, by actual work in a shop or mill.

The industrial course lasts four years. The boys are taught the theory in school, and gain not only practice, but are paid, in their work outside.

Auto News

By J. C. KERRISON.

The 500-mile New York reliability run, which is to be inaugurated on Wednesday and continue for three days, will be one of the most exacting in the history of endurance contests. It will bring together at least twenty-five contestants, who will run over the Long Island and Connecticut roads.

The rules, which were drawn up by David Beecroft, George Robinson and Emanuel Lascaris, have been accepted by the American Automobile Association and will in all probability be adopted to govern stock car reliability runs in the future.

Under the rules all accessories on a car are taken into consideration and a penalty will be imposed for each dozen on accessories when on the road as well as defects in them which show at the end of the contest. This is the first contest in which rules of this nature have ever been used in America. About the only thing that will not receive consideration on a car is the clock.

In packing different cases with grease, it is well to remember that the grease must be thin enough to work in between the teeth of the gears or it will do no good. If the grease is too thick, the gear teeth will merely cut a path in it. It is a good plan to use grease that will just flow without being heated in the Summer, and a slightly lighter grease in the colder months to offset the natural thickening due to cold. If the grease is too thin it is likely to work along the shafts and get into the brakes.

Carburetion may sometimes be helped by substituting sheet lead as a material in manifold gaskets, instead of asbestos. The reason is that lead is a much better conductor of heat than asbestos, and hence some of the jacket heat warms the manifold and consequently the incoming mixture. If the manifold is cold, while the jacket near is warm, and the studs to which the manifold is bolted are warm the fitting of a sheet lead manifold is likely to improve carburetion in exactly the degree that the manifold is warmed by the heat from the jacket. Of course, the lead gasket should be very carefully fitted to prevent leaks, and should be made of soft sheet lead.

Settle Contest on Folsom Will

The contest over the will of Mrs. Julia E. Folsom of Brookline, which bequeathed $500,000 to her sons and daughters, was privately settled before the case came up for trial in Dedham court today. The will bequeathed the bulk of the estate in four equal parts, two parts to the daughters, Mrs. Mary G. Dexter and Mrs. Julia E. Barrell, the other two parts to be held in trust for Chandler H. Folsom and Francis B. W. Folsom until their deaths, the funds then to revert to the daughters.

CHILDREN LOVE SYRUP OF FIGS

It is cruel to force nauseating, harsh physic into a sick child.

Look back at your childhood days. Remember the "dose" mother insisted on—castor oil, calomel, cathartics. How you hated them, how you fought against taking them.

With our children it's different. Mothers who cling to the old form of physic simply don't realize what they do. The children's revolt is well-founded. Their tender little "insides" are injured by them.

If your child's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing, give only delicious "California Syrup of Figs." Its action is positive, but gentle. Millions of mothers keep this harmless "fruit laxative" handy; they know children love to take it; that it never fails to clean the liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach, and that a teaspoonful given today saves a sick child tomorrow.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on each bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. See that it is made by "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.

Anticipate These $48,000,000 Sales

—That's what the great family of Boston American readers will spend within the next 20 shopping days—AT LEAST Forty-eight Million Dollars.

A conservative estimate, this figure, based on the American's daily circulation. The calculation allows only $80 per family as the monthly expenditure for necessities, and $40 for Christmas gifts.

Alert Boston American advertisers will attract the bulk of this sum to their stores.

They will secure the major part of this profitable patronage.

Today Boston American readers are prepared to do their Christmas shopping.

And the time to talk holiday goods to them is NOW. Supplement your regular day-to-day offerings with seasonable gift suggestions!

What if many merchants ARE going to wait another week before starting their Christmas campaign?

By then you can be realizing returns on your advertising, if—

You start YOUR campaign tomorrow!

Advertising efficiency does not come from eleventh hour action. Maximum results follow only a well-ordered campaign.

The public must be informed in advance if their favor is to be secured at the propitious time.

So it is that the merchant who plants the seeds of suggestion in the minds of Boston American readers—PLANTS THEM EARLY ENOUGH—will reap the greatest harvest of holiday sales.

★ ★ ★

Mentally note this:

The Boston American is a home newspaper. As such it is the logical medium for the advertising of holiday merchandise.

And, because they discriminate, readers of the Boston American do their shopping early—

And, because they are home-loving people, their Christmas purchases are generous.

Your gift suggestions should be before them within another twenty-four hours.

PUCK CHASERS PLAN STRENUOUS SEASON AT LOCAL ICE RINK—TUFTS AND TECH TO OPEN PLAY

M'ALEER OUSTED FROM RED SOX BY BAN JOHNSON

Mr. Lannin will be elected president of the club, and I will remain as vice-president.

Says Carrigan is O. K.

Mr. Lannin was present when this statement was made. He said that while the club would be equally divided between himself and the Taylors, so that neither would control, he believed that there would be absolute harmony. He also said:

In Mr. Carrigan, I think we have one of the best managers in the country, and he will have every opportunity to make a grand record for the club next year. I am negotiating for the stock through Mr. Arthur C. Wise, the local partner of the firm of Millet, Roe & Hagin of New York and Boston.

This deal will end a year's quarrel among the out of town Red Sox magnates. McAleer will retire from the presidency and McRoy from the office of secretary of the club. It is possible that Hugh A. McBreen will once more take the office of secretary and treasurer. He held that position when John I. Taylor was president.

Will Divide Ownership.

The Taylors and Lannin will share ownership of the team equally. The Red Sox is owned by a stock company. There are 1,000 shares of stock, of which the Taylors own 500. The remainder has been distributed among Western interests. McAleer and McRoy have been credited with owning about 66 shares each, or less than a 15 per cent. interest altogether. Garland Stahl, his father-in-law, H. W. Mahan, of Chicago, H. M. Randall of Chicago, President Ban Johnson of the American League and President Charles A. Comiskey of the Chicago White Sox have been represented as the principal owners of the balance.

The Taylors originally owned all of the stock, but when Fenway Park was built in the Winter of 1911-1912 they disposed of a one-half interest to the Western interests mentioned. The price was reported to be $150,000 or $170,000. It was agreed that McAleer should have the presidency, with a salary that has never been revealed, and McRoy was to be secretary, also receiving a salary.

At that time Stahl was not interested. McAleer induced him to return to the diamond, giving him and his father-in-law the privilege of buying stock and paying him a substantial salary besides. The salary was understood to be something like $10,000.

The Red Sox won the American League pennant and the world's championship the first year under this arrangement. The profits were large—more than $250,000, in fact. The Westerners, who had bought a half interest for $150,000, therefore made $125,000 or more the very first year, the profit credited to them almost equalling their whole investment.

Westerners Retire on "Velvet."

While last season was not so profitable, still the Red Sox made considerable money and the Westerners' share of the profits was fully large enough, when added to their 1912 share, to equal or exceed the amount they invested. So whatever sum they receive from Lannin for their interest will be "velvet."

The immensity of the 1912 profits was unfortunate in one way for the Red Sox, because so large and unexpected a windfall inspired internal trouble. It was reported that Stahl and McRoy could not see what McAleer was doing to earn his share of the golden harvest and the story leaked out that these two planned to oust McAleer. McAleer heard this story last Summer and started after Stahl with blood in his eye.

McAleer consulted with President Ban Johnson of the American League in Chicago. It is understood that Johnson consented to the eventual release of Stahl, but insisted that the manager be let gracefully at the end of the season when his one year contract as manager would terminate.

In the meantime, however, the story of McAleer's intentions was published in the Boston AMERICAN and Stahl asked McAleer if it was true that McAleer expected to dismiss him. McAleer admitted that it was. Stahl then insisted on withdrawing at once and McAleer forthwith released him. The club arranged to pay Stahl for the remainder of the term of the contract.

McAleer immediately appointed Bill Carrigan as manager.

Ban Johnson Was Angered.

The summary dismissal of Stahl, however, angered Ban Johnson and he made a statement strongly setting forth his disapproval. It was assumed then that when ever it seemed opportune Johnson would make this disapproval felt more materially. Johnson was able to insist upon McAleer's retirement because of his ownership in the Red Sox. It is understood that he, or others whom he influenced, advanced part of the money to finance McAleer's connection with the club.

Before he left with the Giants and White Sox for their tour of the world, McAleer announced that his stock was on the market.

In the meantime the Taylors made a liberal offer to buy back the half interest in the club held by the westerners. At this time, Lannin became interested. The Jamaica Plain real estate man, who is an ardent "fan," already held thirty-five shares of stock in the Boston Nationals which he bought from John Harris of Pittsburgh when the latter sold out to the late William Hepburn Russell. At the last meeting of the Boston Nationals, in fact, Lannin was elected a director. This office he will now resign, relinquishing his interest in the Braves.

Several conferences were held with Ban Johnson, who, it is understood, had full authority to represent all of the Western stock, and it was agreed that it would be for the best interests of the Red Sox—particularly in respect to public support—if all of the stock were held in the East, preferably in Boston. The Lannin offer was accepted.

The price paid for the stock has not been announced but it has been rumored as from $200,000 to $250,000. This would give the westerners a clear profit of at least $50,000 on their deal of two years ago, together with their share of the club's profits in the meantime—fully $100,000 more. The westerners, therefore, picked up a profit of much more than 100 per cent. from their two years' plunge into Boston baseball.

Quits Sport for Religion.

URBANA, Ill., Dec. 1.—Jimmy Hunter, winner of the quarter-mile in the conference meet at Madison and a member of the Illinois national championship relay team, will pass up a chance to win honors for himself at Philadelphia next Spring in order that he may take up religious work.

BARREL PRICES

As wholesalers selling at retail at barrel prices (by measure only) we can and do give those who are pleased to trade with us, pure old liquors at small cost. Do you know how never traded here want to keep on paying too much for too little?

Back of every drop of Snow's ripe old whiskey stands our hundred year guarantee of purity, yet the prices are well within the reach of economical buyers at 75c and $1.00 a legal quart.

TUFTS AND TECH TO OPEN HOCKEY PLAY SATURDAY

With the appearance of the Tufts and M. I. T. sextets in a game at the Arena next Saturday evening the hockey season in Boston will be officially opened.

Elaborate arrangements have been made for the Canadian game in the Hub this year, and it is predicted that better contests will be played and to far greater attendance than ever before.

That Boston will be represented by some of the strongest teams in the country is practically assured. The B. A. A. seven will again be seen on the ice and is expected to display its old-time form. The Pilgrim A. A. team should be a much improved aggregation. A new club, the Irish-American A. C. of this city, will be represented by a seven, and with the various college and schoolboy teams, the Boston public will see a great deal of the Canadian pastime. Five local teams have already had their first practice on the Arena surface.

B. A. A. Lineup the Same.

The B. A. A., which has always attracted much attention in this city, will be represented by a team that should equal, if not better, the wonderful record established by last season's seven, which defeated the strongest Canadian teams.

The B. A. A. will present practically the same lineup. The Unicorn puck chasers practice on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons.

The Pilgrim A. A., which finished last season with a rare flash of form, should start the season where it left off, and it does, the team should defeat many of the Canadians and make it merry for the B. A. A. and the Irish-American seven.

The Pilgrim club will have Bray, Whitton, Fynan, McKinnon, Small, Dunn (formerly of Montreal), Johnson of Amherst, N.S., Prought of Sydney, N.S., Tommy Burns of Forest Hills, Charlie Foote, Jack Fitts and Austin Kelly from which to select its team.

It is not known as yet what the Irish-American team will offer, but it is the general opinion around town that some of the basketball cage this afternoon and will continue this work until cold weather sets in.

Besides Captain Kelly, Percy and Comerford, veterans of last season, are available, and the new material is exceptionally good. "Bulger" Lowe, the former star Arlington High player, is a candidate for the team, and is almost sure of a position.

JAKE DAUBERT BEST SLUGGER IN NATIONAL

The official National League batting averages were announced today. Jake Daubert of Brooklyn, although in third place, is the real leader of the batters with an average of .350. Yingling of Brooklyn and M'Donald of Boston have better averages than Daubert but they did not play in nearly as many games.

Beauty

The Value of Walking Described by Helen Bannon

Miss Helen Bannon

By MAUDE MILLER

THERE are many pretty women who do not take a pretty picture, and there are women who lack beauty, but whom the art of the photographer transforms into a being for an artist's model.

And there are also women who have beauty that is not lost before a camera, and Miss Helen Bannon, the actress, is one of that fortunate number.

Laughingly, she disclaimed all pretensions to beauty.

"I don't see where those fellows get their nerve," said the Herald Barber, would just as soon buy into a cage with a gorilla as to speak to a strange lady. I would just as soon be billed in a cage as froze on the street."

"Yes, but still men slut true gents like you, George," declared the Manicure Lady. "Some men is little enough so that nothing a girl would say to them could possibly make them feel smaller.

Asked her secret, she said she had none. She laughs at her troubles and they fly away. Others not so wise encourage them to stay, and wrinkles result. She is regular in her hours of rest and outdoor exercise, without which regime no good looks last long.

She spends a great deal of her time out of doors, and walks long distances—a healthful gait, but briskly, as with a definite idea in mind.

"The shop window gait," she said with a laugh, "brings no definite returns. On the contrary, I am quite satisfied that the woman who does all her exercising in the shopping district goes so many distractingly pretty things in the windows that she becomes a little envious, and the otherwise beneficial effects of outdoor exercise are lost in the feeling of envy they inspire. No one can get good effects from filling one's lungs with fresh air, if at the same time a little resentment is allowed to enter.

"I find, too, that the best results are obtained when one walks alone. The girl out for a brisk walk by herself walks more rapidly. She is not tempted to pause at soda fountains, and is less likely to yield to the craving for chocolate, either of which is a detriment in keeping the eyes bright and the skin clear.

"'Beauty Secrets' is a misnomer; there is no secret to beauty. Any girl who is healthy and happy and helpful becomes beautiful to those she loves. Three things are invaluable to the girl who longs for beauty: Health, Happiness and Helpfulness."

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

"THERE was a fellow who tried to flirt with me coming down-town this morning," said the Manicure Lady. "He was some kind of a foreigner, and his work was certain and struck up quite a flirtation. He was feeling quite big and masterful about it until rather lit in on him, and the way he bawled out my poor brother was a shame. The old gent ain't been on the hard stuff for a good many years, and he chums with some copper liked old scouts, but when it comes to the woman question he's got enough of that chivaree or whatever it is, to fill twenty knights of old, and he ain't got no time in the world for flirting or folks that dirt. If Wilfred has made any contest since that time he has kept them to himself."

"I suppose it is all right for school boys to flirt a little," said the fiend Barber, "but when a grown man does it there is something the matter with his head. Look at some of the warts that come in here and boast to you about how they are off the girls. Who was that dope I seen you freezing yesterday afternoon?"

"Oh, that? That was a real estate man from New York," said the Manicure Lady. "He didn't need to have his hair did at all, because somebody had did them the day before, the way they looked, but I suppose he happened to throw his lamps this way when you was combing his hair, and got fatal beauty did the rest.

"He asked me if I realized what a queen I was, and how madly he could worship me. I told him that I always knew I was a queen and that he could worship me until he was black in the face if it amused him any. 'But does it mean nothing to you, this adoration of mine?' he says. 'About as much as the standing of the St. Louis baseball club,' I says right back at him. If I wasn't for the rasp of your voice I wouldn't know that you were sitting across from me,' I says to him. I told him that he was an it, a nit and a nut. Goodness only knows what I didn't tell him, George, once my royal anger got to running the bases. I guess he never seen a girl good and laughly before, because he reddened up like a salmon's tie and I couldn't get through with his nails quick enough. He gave me a 50-cent tip, too. There's no use talking, George, it don't that kind of man good to have the wind took out of his sails now and then, and when that task needs performing, your little friend here on the left is equal to the occasion. To me, George, the wiles of designing men that you read about in the novels is about as harmful as a flock of vicious sheep. Here comes a fresh looking guy now and I feel just right if he turns out that way."

THE FAMILY CUPBOARD

A Thrilling Story of High Society Life in New York, Adapted from Owen Davis's Dramatic Success

(Novelized by)

At Saratoga

(From Owen Davis' play now being presented in New York by William A. Brady.—Copyright, 1913, by International News Service.)

"I WANT you to lend me five hundred dollars. It's nothing to you—it wouldn't have been much to me once, but it's—it's—everything—right now." The boy tried to keep his voice steady. But this was his last hope—it meant so much—he had rejoiced—had built so much on the fact of Tom's visit. Kitty had been so hopeful—and sweet.

"To spend on Kitty Claire!" said Tom, in deep scorn.

"You!" Ken jumped forward fiercely —then by a great effort controlled himself. Necessity is the mother of tact!

"No! No! I'll swallow that. Tom—

A fellow learns to swallow a lot when he's down!"

SOME TRUTHS

"THEN GET UP," said Tom sternly.

"I will, if you"——

"Hold on! I would give a lot of five hundreds to see you where you belong—on your knees before your father. But I won't give you five cents to spend on a woman like this."

"Don't Tom, please—you don't understand. Kitty May is"——

"Kenneth, I understand all too well just what your Kitty May is! I understand too well what her damnable spell is making of you! Haven't I suffered for the skeleton in your cupboard? Why, boy, I love your sister—as you can't understand the word 'love' yet. Alice was to have been my wife until, between you, Kitty Claire and you, you managed to break up your family and make Alice so ashamed of her name that she is even afraid to exchange it for mine!"

Ken ceased his tone of pleading. Pride —false pride—came to the rescue, and, like the foolish young Chevalier Bayard he was for a worthless woman's sake, he became stern and strong. There was a fine strain in the boy—if only a good woman had strengthened that mere strain to warp and woof and fibre of fineness and strength.

"That's enough! I'm grovelling to you, Tom, for money right now—right in the dirt—or I'd do my best to kill you for what you have just said! Miss May—or Miss Claire, as you choose to call her—has lived here for five weeks in the very best apartment as most respected by me—I swear to that—as my sister is by you."

"Ken!" said Tom, deeply moved by the boy's innocent, ignorant, hopelessly misplaced faith.

"Ken, my boy! I don't know what I can say to you—it is all so hopeless. You are like a blind man—I can't make you see! I WONDER WHAT WILL OPEN YOUR EYES?"

"Five hundred dollars, Tom! Give it to me—then go! I'll pay it sometime—somehow—every cent."

"Will you come with me to your father, Ken? Will you, KEN, WILL YOU COME TO YOUR FATHER?"

In fear the boy answered—but he little knew what his prophecy meant.

"You don't know what you are asking! I couldn't go to him—and nothing would ever bring him to me! Nothing but death!" he added in an awestruck undertone.

"Ken! I know this much! Something happened between you here in this room that day [illegible] has made Charles Nelson as old man! I don't know what it was. I don't want to. But this I do know—he will forgive you!"

"He couldn't!" murmured Ken in nightmare horror of that blow that haunted him now—waking or sleeping.

"You've got him wrong, Ken, you and your mother. I know him. Worked with him for years—fell in love with his daughter because she was so much his I'd thank God for him if I were his son. I would never say or feel that this man had done one wrong thing in his life. I'd say—he's a man—a very human man—big enough to be forgiven—big enough to know how to forgive! That's what I came here to tell you, Kenneth. I wish I dared say it to your mother—although —take it from me—he's better off without either one of you!"

"He's been doing a man's work since the heavy load of an expensive family that he carried uncomplainingly all these years has been taken off his back. Why, Ken, when I didn't suspect his money troubles, although I was his partner, your mother reproached me for my ignorance because I was almost his son-in-law. I had to be rude to a woman, for I told her she should have known since she was 'almost his wife.'"

"It's all very true, I suppose, Tom—but what's the good now? It's all a bit too late," said Ken, with a fixed glaze coming over his eyes. "You won't lend me five hundred—well, what's the use of all this?"

"Ken, here is the key to why I won't give you what you want. Your father is going to make ten times as much money as the old firm ever made. He is a man who is found to succeed when he isn't financially handicapped. BUT AMONG YOU—YOU'VE BROKEN HIS HEART! THAT'S WHY I HAVE NO IMPERIAL SYMPATHY FOR YOU—AND YOUR BUNGLED LIFE!! THAT AND THE FACT THAT ALICE CAN'T LEAVE HIM—AND SO WE ARE PAYING YOUR DEBT—ALICE AND I! SO I'VE NO MONEY FOR YOU, KEN, WHILE THINGS ARE LIKE THIS!"

He turned abruptly and left the room. Kenneth sank into a chair—desperate, his last hope gone, his last home the cut—and all for Kitty Claire.

Kitty Claire had kept her word: "I'll get you, Charlie, if it's the last thing I ever do!"

There was a timid knock at the door. Kenneth remained sunk in despair. Another knock. Then the door opened gently—and Mary Burk stepped into the room.

A REAL FRIEND

"Ken!" she said in her sweet endeared voice—the music inherited from the far-off isle of Erin, the Gaelic tones that come down through long generations to the daughters of Ireland.

"Mary!"

The boy leaped to his feet. His shoulders straightened to manhood, his eyes filled with purpose, with some dim sense that he scarcely sensed as he faced his boyhood sweetheart, the one loyal friend in his whole wasted young life.

"Mary!"

Then as if sunshine and the breath of springtime had come with Mary Burk to his garish, gloomy and tobacco pol-soaked room.

To Be Continued Tomorrow.

A Bachelor's Diary

By MAX

OCT. 27—No woman has the right to put the responsibility of her conduct on the man. She never say, as Sally Spencer has said, in effect to me: "I love you. I am weak, you are strong. Whatever happens to us in the future will depend on you."

I am not strong. He may never lived who was strong. If Sally were a young girl, or an unmarried woman, knowing men only as she sees them in the heroes in books and plays, her ignorance would be pitiful, and, in a way, would be her defence. But she has been married ten or twelve years to the weakest man ever created. There is nothing she does not know about my sex. Keen, observing, of an analytical mind, I have known her to read a man the first time she met him, and to point out weaknesses and defects which no one suspected at the time, but which later developed.

I have seen her give the man who boasted of his strength such a child like look of admiration, that he at once became like putty in her hands, and she did it, not with any temptation to transgress—Sally never transgressed the law, Lucy—but just to prove his weakness.

She is a clever woman, a beautiful woman, a woman born to love and be loved and is a neglected wife! It is a sad combination. I can think of none worse.

She is tired of being a Pullman car tramp and wants to come home. She would ask the pretty nurse to marry me, and run away from temptation, but what manner of man would I be to sacrifice a girl in that fashion? And besides, no man likes to run from temptation. He likes to hang around it to prove he is not afraid. He likes to flirt with it, dilly dally with it, and temporize with it, saying all the time, "Ah, who's afraid of you! You think I am weak like other men, don't you? Well, I am not!"

And to show that he is not afraid, he edges a little closer to it and dares it, in the maudlin manner of my connected sex, to come on! And if it hesitates in its advance, he knows it not, for he has begun to pursue it!

Oh, Sally! Sally! You who know the men, to talk of our strength. I am ashamed of you!

MR ANSWERS HER

October 28—I have answered Sally's letter at last, and this is a copy. It may help me to square myself with my conscience should such a future adjustment of my moral accounts be necessary.

"My Dear Sally—Your letter interested me so much that I have been a month in trying to frame a reply. Perhaps you will think it strange that a man should have outside heaven's gate and dollcemb, if or not, he will enter, but when he is so worldly wise that an imaginative child like Lucy can read him like a picture a gibbet within the walls, it is not strange that he hesitates and may turn away.

"There was a time, my dear girl, when I was young, that I would scale the walls to obtain that for which the gates are now opening inward for me, but the spirit of adventure cools with the years, and the man who has been decently married half a century has a pride in his record that has the saving grace of a moral sense.

"I would like to keep the slate clean, my dear. No doubt when St. Peter looks at me over the rim of his glasses I will be on accusing eye because of the slightler I have done to my business competitors, and if there is a crown there for me it will not be double-decked, nor heavy with jewels. But I will bear no resentment to his condemnation of earthly accounts and heavenly jewels. St. Peter was not a business man and simply doesn't understand.

"But he was a man on earth at one time, and knew many women, and for that reason I feel satisfied that I will not be judged harshly. There is no page in the account book bearing my name that is darkened by my woman's shame. Merely the wolf that has fought with other wolves, and never attacked a sheepfold, will not have to ask for mercy.

"I love you, Sally. I do not claim it is entirely a spiritual love. That variety of affection is found only in the books, and here, of late, even the romances are flavoring it highly with the love of the flesh. I love you with the love a man has for the woman he would like to marry. And that means that I respect you above all other women. Would you care to risk that respect? Believe me, dear girl, a man's respect is worth more than his love any day.

JUST A FRIEND

"Come home, or not, as it pleases you. You will find me your good friend, as I have always been. But it is a friendship that needs scorching, and promises and holding back. Remember that!

Manette is well. Richards, Tompkins and the other friends in my home, for I cannot call them servants, are the same dear faithful souls. My sickness taught me many things, and among them was that no man need feel friendless so long as he has an employe. They want to be his friends, and it is his fault if they are not.

"We still have and love the brown-eyed pup. His heart breaks every morning when Manette starts off to school without him, and beats every night when she comes home.

"I am leaving the pretty nurse to the last. A good girl, Sally; a loving and lovable girl, just fascinating enough to make me wicked in my thoughts, and just good enough to make me a better man than I have ever been, in my actions.

"MAX."

INTERNAL EVIDENCE.

At a certain college custom ordains that at examination time each of the candidates shall write the following pledge at the bottom of his papers:

"I hereby declare, on my honor, that I have neither given nor received assistance during the examination."

Now, recently, it so happened that a young fellow, after handing in one of the papers, suddenly remembered that in his haste he had omitted to write the oath. On the following day, therefore, he sought out one of the examiners and told him that he had forgotten to put the required pledge on his paper.

The old man looked at him over the top of his glasses and dryly remarked: "Quite unnecessary. Your paper in it self is sufficient evidence. I've just been correcting it."

The Drag

By DONALD BRIAN,

Star of "The Marriage Market"

(Copyright, 1913, by International News Service.)

THE sixth movement of the Futurist Twirl is a still further elaboration of the turkey trot.

It begins with a drag forward, the man starting with the right foot, the girl backward with the left foot, as in the picture, and the man going forward with the left and the girl back with the right, to make two drags or four counts.

This drag is simply a skip done slowly. Then there are eight hops, or slight of the dragging steps done rapidly, very rapidly, so as to make them almost a skip. This rapid movement may be better known to dancers of today as the scissors step.

The legs are held rigid and the movement of four counts ends with the pose in the second picture finishing up the eight counts of the music, the left foot of the man across the right foot of the girl. Don't forget to have your music right with you—hum if you have nothing better—for this dance depends on the lilt of a good tango for its better understanding.

This position in the second picture is exactly the position for the beginning of the scissors step also, so that when it is practiced it will help a great deal to fall into the position immediately.

After the sixth movement eight more counts of the turkey trot are added, and then a repetition of the flah walk diculated in the third movement.

Of course it can readily be seen that a written description of this last movement is not entirely adequate because the steps are original and not at all easy to learn or to understand, either, for that matter. And, although I have great hopes for those who have experimented with a great many of the new dances, still the dance should really be seen in order to perfect this sixth movement as well as the fifth. However, those who are familiar with the scissors step will have very little trouble in catching on to this slight variation.

In the "drag" the legs are held rigid, the movement ending with the pose in the top picture

The Skip

The secret of the Futurist Twirl is now revealed. And I hope by this time its intricacies have been mastered by many.

At any rate, it has been a gratification to me to see it danced this Winter, and I have no doubt that I shall some day stumble upon some of my pupils who have faithfully studied my directions through these columns, and who will dance it a great deal better than I do.

A Merry Christmas to you all!

RUBBING IT IN

He had taken and furnished a small office, on the door of which he had inscribed, "J. Hard, Consulting Engineer." Underneath was set forth that his hours of work were from 10 to 3 p.m., so far, not a soul had come to disturb them or to consult him about anything—not even the purchase of a penny stamp.

Even the boy in the office opposite was equally contemptuous, and past Hard could not help feeling depressed.

One morning he went out to lunch, and, as usual, placed a card on the door and wrote on it, "Shall be back in an hour."

On his return he found added, to these words, in a boyish scrawl, "What for?"

BUSINESS AND FINANCIAL NEWS

EDITED BY EXPERTS

Latest in Today's Stock Markets

By W. H. ROSS, Financial Editor.

Stocks were quiet and irregular today, markets being dull at the start and remaining so. There was a disposition to wait until President Wilson's recommendations to Congress be made tomorrow, could be read and considered. There was no change of consequences in sentiment or market conditions over Sunday.

By afternoon in Boston New Haven was up ½, and there were small gains for Boston Elevated, United Fruit and American Telephone. Boston & Maine was off ½. Granby was down 1 and Osceola 2. Several coppers had receded fractionally.

In New York American Can common and preferred were each off 2¼. New Haven was up ⅝ and Amalgamated was off ⅜. Steel had shaded, Union Pacific was firm, and Canadian Pacific had advanced a little.

No Change at Opening.

There was no change at the opening of the New York market and the price tendency was indefinite. Fluctuations were narrow in regard to most stocks, although American Can issues weakened around a point. The government suit for dissolution was no surprise, but it caused comparatively heavy selling. More business was done in Can during the morning than in Steel.

Copper issues stood up well in face of the slump in warrant quotations in London and statistics showing that the European visible supply had increased considerably during the last fortnight of November. There was some more support for Union Pacific than for most stocks and New Haven made a good gain during the first hour. One reason assigned for this was that the earnings outlook is more favorable for this road. Canadian Pacific, Steel and Union Pacific sold ex the quarterly dividend.

The declaration of the regular preferred dividend was helpful to Goodrich, both common and preferred issues advancing. It is stated that a reduction of the rate had not even been considered. Strength of Guggenheim Exploration could be accounted for by the rumor that at the next declaration its dividend rate may be increased to 4 per cent. American stocks were in no demand in London but averaged firm at the close. Canadian Pacific was higher there.

The Boston market was extremely dull at the start and trading did not become more active subsequently. Some issues were stronger but coppers were dropped as a class.

Time Rates Advanced.

Time rates had an upward tendency in the money market, there being an advance of ¼ to 5 per cent. in the bid for sixty-day and four-months money. The sixty-day quotation was 5 per cent., and for five and six months the range was 4⅝ to 5 per cent.

During the morning in New York the call rate was as high as 8 per cent. In Boston call rates were marked up today, the range being from 5½ to 6 per cent.

The News Bureau prints a New York dispatch saying, "It is belief among bankers recently active in shipping gold to Canada that movement is over for the time being. That Montreal exchange on New York was advanced is by no conclusive indication of this. This goes to show that window dressing on the part of Canadian banks, prior to the close of November, had a good deal to do with recent gold movement from here across the border."

Money Easier in Berlin.

The money situation in Berlin is much improved. The financial correspondent there for Hearst newspapers cables:

"The settlement here was unusually easy, and with a light account to carry over the money market was wholly uninfluenced. Some leading of call money below 2 per cent. is almost unprecedented for Berlin.

"The press is discussing the prospects of another reduction in the Reichsbank rate, but the president of that institution said on Thursday that a reduction will be inadvisable owing to the tension in London and New York and the expectation of heavy pressure on the Reichsbank during December."

Financial News in Brief.

The London copper warrants market opened weak; spot and futures being off £1 5s.

During the last half of November European stocks of copper, according to fortnightly statistics, increased 2,344 tons.

Edward Curtis Smith, former Governor of Vermont and former president of the Central Vermont road, has been elected president of Southern New England Railway Co. of Rhode Island, Southern New England Railroad Corporation of Massachusetts, and Central Vermont Transportation Co., all subsidiaries of Grand Trunk Railway. President Chamberlin of the Grand Trunk Railway has resigned other positions.

The Boston bank statement shows a reserve excess decrease of $932,000 and a decrease in the excess with reserve agents amounting to $2,520,000.

The copper exports for October, exclusive of Southern and Pacific ports, amounted to 29,580 tons, compared with 29,007 tons in October and 19,146 in November a year ago.

TRUST COMPANIES PROVE OF GREAT AID TO WOMEN WHO ARE BEQUEATHED LARGE AMOUNTS

The tendency of the times is toward a greater realization of the responsibility of the State in its relation to the individual. Public service commissions, direct primaries, a greater sense of the obligation of the stronger toward the weaker and in general an amelioration of the conditions of living are an outcome of the awakened public conscience within the last few years. And this renewed sense of brotherhood has not alone taken the form of more solicitude for the weaker in our human relationships but the State's and society's obligation to protect property with every safeguard has been recognized as never before.

We see Legislatures enacting laws to assure honest management of banks and trust companies, enactments not prompted by breaches of trust on the part of the officials of such institutions, but rather brought about through a desire to make assurance doubly sure, and with a view to keeping step with the awakened public interest in all that pertains to the conserving of the products of thrift and intelligence.

With this greater sense of the State's duty toward the individual has come a corresponding confidence on the part of the individual toward the corporations which serve him in the more intimate things of life. Of these none so concerns the man of large or of small wealth as the manner in which his estate is to be administered. It is every man's duty to provide for his family. During his lifetime the average man succeeds in doing this in a more or less satisfactory, and if there be blame he alone must bear the consequences.

Seeking an executor is a task from which most men shrink. Although it is inevitable that his property shall pass to the care of others, it is natural for mankind to postpone the making of that document which eventually finds its way to the Probate Court. A son, a brother, a friend quite naturally suggest themselves to the prospective testator and not infrequently the burden falls to a wife. Not long ago in a New England city a gentleman who had won a large fortune—nearly a million—bequeathed his entire estate to his wife and made her sole executrix. There were a son and a daughter whose interests the testator trusted entirely to the mother.

Now this woman was wise. She respected her husband's desire to pay her this last compliment—perhaps the most convincing she ever received—but she also realized that the care of an estate, even of a million dollars, was a task she could hardly be expected to perform safely and satisfactorily to all concerned. Accordingly, she did the wisest thing possible by turning the management of the entire estate over to a trust company, took therefrom whatever of income she required for her needs, gave liberally to her son and daughter and then—wisest of the things she did—she permitted the remainder of the income to accumulate, thereby adding materially to the value of the estate.

Confidence from Knowledge.

Back of this decision of the wise woman was the confidence born of knowledge of what a trust company can do and the realization that men experienced in the investing of money, the custody of trust funds and public good is the main thing, were to have charge of the money her husband had accumulated.

How much of this confidence is a result of the State's well conceived ideas of financial supervision it is difficult to determine, but this woman did know the men who had risen to places of responsibility in the particular trust company she selected and knew that they were men of character and ability. Such are the men who direct the destinies of the trust companies in all the important cities of the country. Add to the personal integrity of these men the rigid laws, which a beneficent State exacts and the systematic supervision that results from such laws and the safeguarding of depended-on estates seem nearly perfect both in the extent and the scope of its regulating power. It means that estates will be administered by men who have been trained to the work, it means that when knotty problems arise the best legal advice obtainable will be provided and that not only one mind will be brought to bear upon the problem, but the collective knowledge of many who have had years of experience in this particular work.

Coupons and the Income Tax

WE respectfully suggest to clients that they cut off and deposit coupons for collection as far in advance of the due date as possible; never less than two weeks prior to that date. By adopting this suggestion prompt payment of coupons can be obtained.

The work entailed in filling out certificates makes it advisable for persons to select boxes in safe deposit vaults that have a large number of coupon rooms. The vaults of the Old Colony Trust Company are exceptionally commodious. Your inspection is invited.

Those who are in doubt as to the form of certificate to use are invited to consult with the officers at either office.

LARGEST NET PAID CIRCULATION IN NEW ENGLAND, DAILY AND SUNDAY

Railroads That Do Right Should Have Relief

Some of the railroads ought to be allowed by the government to increase their freight rates, and some of the railroads should be denied the right.

The hard task of separating the deserving railroad managements from the undeserving devolves upon the Interstate Commerce Commission. Not all the railroads are entitled to relief.

On the very day, for instance, that Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore & Ohio, made his able and convincing argument before the commission of the need of higher freight rates by deserving railroads, evidence was disclosed in St. Louis of the looting of the "Frisco" road by syndicates, in which its own officials took part, of more than $7,038,000, leaving the road bankrupt.

It is idle for the railroad managers to expect the public to forget the methods that wrecked railroad after railroad, methods applied so recently that every man living along the line of the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. still suffers and pays a penalty.

There would be no need of higher freight rates on the New Haven road if the Morgan-Rockefeller management had not spent more than $200,000,000 of the railroad's money in buying up trolleys, steamships, wharfs and legislatures in the effort to create a monopoly. Are the people of five States to be required to pay higher rates for everything transported in New England, simply because the unhappy stockholders of this railroad left everything to Mr. Morgan and Mr. Rockefeller and permitted them to wreck the most profitable railroad property, save one, in the world?

On the other hand, it is simply justice that the railroad managers who are attending strictly to the business of operating their roads, and doing it well, and who find that in spite of all that they can do the cost of operation is increasing faster than it is possible to increase earnings, should not be punished for the sins of others.

Many good railroad managers today are suffering unjustly for the sins of their predecessors. Railroad rebates, bullying and bribery, easy favors for a few and injustice to the many, corruption of public officials and incessant political intrigue with bosses—these inveterate railroad sins of the past generation are rapidly passing and must soon end forever, but having sown the wind the railroads are reaping the whirlwind.

If the effort to promote the safety and comfort of passengers and elevate the condition of railroad employes has produced a condition which makes it impossible to operate the honestly capitalized railroads at present rates save at a loss, the rates necessarily must be raised.

Not the argument, but the figures presented by the railroad spokesmen need dissection—the argument is self-evident. Upon this question no prejudice, no rancor, bred, however justly, by the scandalous misconduct of railroad managers in the past, should be allowed to enter. The commission's action should not, and will not, be influenced by the very general and justified distrust of railroad financiers.

The Supreme Court in the recent Minnesota rate decision pointed a way for the Railroad Commission. The highest court set aside certain orders by the State Commissions in Minnesota, Wisconsin and Nebraska on the ground that they were confiscatory as to certain railroads, but ordered the lower rates put in effect in every case where the railroad could under the lower rate earn a fair return on the capital actually invested in the railroad itself. Such discrimination could not, of course, be applied to two competing railroads between given points, but to apply it to roads monopolizing certain territory, and managed contrary to the public interest, would be both feasible and just.

When the stockholders of the New Haven Railroad have the sense and courage to protect their own property by removing the Morgan-Rockefeller-Pennsylvania Railroad group from control of this once splendid property, and institute their own management, or free President Howard Elliott from the domination of these Wall Street stock gamblers who have wrecked the New Haven, then they can ask with good grace for an increase in freight rates on their railroad.

But never will the public consent to pay more for railroad service while it is in a position to be milked and looted again and again by Morgan and his confederates.

The stockholders of the Boston & Maine are more to be pitied than those of the New Haven. On the Boston & Maine the independent stockholders are in a minority and cannot NOW help themselves, although if they had paid some attention to the management of their railroad ten years ago they would not NOW be so helpless and miserable.

But the people of New England will not consent to be charged more for freight rates and fares on the Boston & Maine while the New Haven Railroad, which has wrecked it, retains any control or influence upon the Boston & Maine.

MIND AND ELECTRONS

By EDGAR LUCIEN LARKIN

Q. "I AM a Persian by birth and of the Aram branch of that race; brought up in the faith of my fathers, and I would like to have you more clearly explain your statement: 'Nothing exists but electrons.' Also, 'How then can mind exist or Creator unless the Creator is, or mind is, composed of electrons?' If nothing exists but electrons how can Creative Mind exist outside of electrons?"—B. PESHMAL-YAN, Hartford, Ct.

A. I tried my best to make these points clear. I am certain that nothing exists within the entire range of the most powerful telespectroscope that humans can make but electrons. Every phase of matter on earth and the same kinds or elements are to be seen on every clear night, glowing in many millions of distant suns, can be resolved into primordial basic electrons. Hence I have repeatedly asserted that nothing exists but electrons.

And everywhere I also stated that they were created, and created by Mind. For in the very nature of all things known to man Mind is the only entity able to add to itself—that is, to think a thought that had not been thought before. How this fundamental Mind came into being I do not know; nor do I know how it created electrons and from these formed the entire universe and all it contains.

I here state, assert and affirm, in addition to my original publication, first, nothing exists but electrons; second, they were created by Mind. But the confusion in the mind of my Persian correspondent is due to the word "nothing." This cannot apply to Mind. It is no thing. Any word whatever that can be connected with matter cannot be used in relation to Mind.

Electrons at rest are not matter—they are pure electricity. How often have I stated that no atom of any chemical element can appear in space until electrons revolve around each other. Specific speeds, distances of orbits, numbers of electrons revolving and directions of their revolutions determine what elementary atom shall be formed. This is the set, rigid and basic fact of modern science.

After an unusually long period of absence of sun spots a small group of four has appeared. They are all small, none larger than the earth. A scene of supernal splendor is now on display. The colossal cluster of many thousand heaped-up suns on Sagittarius and the planet Jupiter with its moons are now both in the field of view of the finder up here. Mortal eye hath not beheld a scene more magnificent. And the air of the mountains is free from dust and vapor. It is pure and a small new comet is in sight.—Lowe Observatory, Cal.

BROTHERLY LOVE

By CHESTER FIRKINS

I'M very fond of waters
And all that in them is:
Afar from higher-thoughters
The jellyfish I quiz.
I'd even like a liner,
Were I the crowd and crew;
I know of naught diviner
Than swimming—without you.

I love the Earth, my teacher,
And all that on it moves—
That is, each honest creature
With paws, or claws, or hooves.
Were I its only roomer
Of human form and cloak,
I'd find, perhaps, some humor
In this terrestrial joke.

The air, all filled with flyers,
I puff with winsome words;
Though some use rubber tires,
A FEW that fly are birds.
The little stars, I greet them—
If people live on Mars,
I do not have to meet them;
And so I love the stars.

I hold no thing so dearly
As this here Universe.
I'm certain—that is, nearly—
That it could have been worse;
But oh, how better, greater
Creation's work would rank
If only the Creator
Had left the Sixth Day blank!

What Your Vermiform Appendix Was Really Made For

Science at Last Believes That Its Purpose Has Been Discovered

Up to date it has always been claimed by surgeons and medical experts that the vermiform appendix was absolutely useless.

Now comes a scientist who believes he has discovered that it has an important function to perform in the scheme of life.

Perhaps after all it is a mistake to have it removed.

The problem is discussed at length in next Sunday's Boston AMERICAN, which will also print the following:

The Two Sisters

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER VII.

THEIR first six weeks of regular occupation seemed to the Marvin girls to drag heavily. Julia found the work at the store both difficult and dull. To stand behind a notion counter and sell pins, needles, tape and other articles of this kind was not an exciting pursuit, and the fact that she must be upon her feet for hours at a time made her task painful. Still she stifled all murmurings and apologized so pleasantly to her companions—when obliged to turn to them repeatedly for instructions—that they all liked her. To be sure, she felt out of her element when the girls gathered in groups and discussed the newest fashions, the latest vaudeville hit and the "fellows" whom they had met, but she forced herself to seem interested and not to show that all this kind of thing bored her.

One cannot make much in the way of confessions at a notion counter, can one?" she observed one afternoon to Ida Ryan, the girl who happened to be standing next to her.

"I should say not!" exclaimed Ida. "But every girl hopes to be transferred to another department before long. If not, I just wouldn't stick it out here."

"What would you do?" asked Julia curiously. She could not accustom herself to the tone that some of the girls took—as if it really made no difference whether they worked.

"Oh, I'd stay at home until I got another job," replied Ida. "Wouldn't you?"

Julia shook her head. "No; for my home is away up in the country. I shall not go back there."

"How silly you were not to stay with your people," Ida observed. "You could save money by living with them. But away from home you have to pay for board and lodging. Now all that I make goes for myself."

The pair had been joined by Mary Benton,—another of the salesgirls—and at this juncture she interposed eagerly:

"I don't agree with you at all!" she exclaimed. "I live at home, but, believe me, I don't save anything on that game. I pay regular board, and besides that I'm always expected to do something to help along with the kids' clothes or with the rent."

"Why don't you live somewhere else then?" asked Ida.

The girl eyed her indignantly. "Well, do you suppose I'm going to leave my own folks when they need my earnings and hand them out for board and lodgings to some body I don't care a rap for? Nit! But I do wish there wasn't a new kid in our family every two years."

"So much for people's getting married!" sniffed Ida. "None of it in mine until a rich guy comes along who can settle me on Easy Street."

"A swell chance we get of meeting that kind at the notion counter here, or when we're wearing the kind of clothes that our salaries buy us!" Ida remarked. "I say it ain't fair that the girls who need to marry rich can't meet rich chaps. If a poor girl wants to stay decent, there's nothing for her but to spend her days clerking it in a store or marry a poor man and be worse off than she was single. I say it ain't fair!"

Julia sighed and became silent as the two girls continued to exchange opinions. Such thoughts they expressed were in her mind frequently nowadays. What was there for her to look forward to? What did all these girls look forward to?

"Sales here!" sounded a sharp voice, and she started violently and hurried toward a customer who had just approached the counter. The floorwalker who had called her nodded approval.

"I'm glad," he said in a low voice, "that one of the girls is paying attention to the job," and as he passed Ida and Mary he paused long enough to utter a word of reproof. His speech of commendation of her was the first bit of praise that Julia Marvin had received since she started to work and it changed the trend of her thoughts from discouragement to hope.

But her spirits received a dash when she reached her room that evening. Caryl was there before her, sitting by the window gazing down into the street, and turned upon her sister as soon as she entered.

"I say, sis," she began, "do you know I've chosen an awfully slow line of work. I sometimes think I'll never catch on to those old pothooks, circles, dots and scratches that people call stenography. They're horrid."

Julia looked grave. "Don't talk like that so soon," she advised. "There's always a sticking point in everything, but now that you have paid for your lessons, it would be foolish to drop them."

"I supposed," Caryl said, "that you'd take that tone, so I'll go on with the thing for a while longer. But the weather's getting warm up in that school."

"No warmer than in the store," her sister reminded her.

"Perhaps not," said the other skeptically. "But you, at least, have the fun of seeing people. Oh, Julia," her tone changing suddenly and her eyes beginning to dance, "I bet I'm ahead of you in one matter. I've had a man—at least he calls himself a man—ask if he could call on me."

Julia started. "Oh, Caryl!" she ejaculated, alarmed. "Who was he?"

Caryl laughed. "Don't be scared," she said. "I turned him down good and plenty. His name is Dobbs, and he's a measly-looking, skinny youth who's studying at the school. He confided to me that he hopes to get a job and help support his mother and sister. So when he asked if he could call, I snapped out quickly, 'No, you can't, thank you!'"

"Poor chap," mused Julia. "But you are right not to tell any man where you live, and not to accept attentions from any one of them."

"I know I'm right about such a cheap skate as Dobbs," Caryl said carelessly, "but if he was a rich fellow I might act differently."

"You would not!" declared her sister firmly.

"I'm not so sure of that," Caryl argued. "By the way, Judy, I caught a glimpse today of the man who followed us the day we came here. He did not see me, and as he is such a common looking creature I was not sorry. I find," she went on thoughtfully, "that it is easy to shub men like him and Dobbs. But"—she hesitated—"there must be in this town some decent men who have cash and would like to meet me."

A wistful sound had crept into her voice, and Julia, hearing it, felt a sudden thrill of apprehension mingled with pity for her "little sister."
